

Karen's choice

Karen likes to hunt for deer. She is spending the week at a cabin in the woods with family. She has hunter's certificate and, like the other members of group, she also has a valid hunter's licence for the zone in which she wants to hunt.

Each day, at dawn, Karen and her father go far into the woods in the hope of encountering a deer...

Four days go by without them encountering a single deer.

On the fifth day, Karen sees a female deer. She knows that the regulations prohibit hunting female deer in this zone.

This measure will contribute to the birth of more deer in the spring.

Since they cannot kill this deer, they go back to the cabin, once again empty-handed.

Still confident, the group returns to the hunt on Sunday. It's their last day.

But once again, no deer.

Monday morning...

Yes, but nobody will know. And whether it is today or yesterday, what difference does it make?

But Karen, the hunting season is over!

What will Karen do?
And what would you do?